Course title	Memory Studies: Theory and Practices
Semester (winter/summer)	Winter	ECTS	6
Lecturer(s)	Prof. Wiktoria Kudela-Świątek
Department	Institute of History and Archival Studies

Course objectives (learning outcomes)

Memory studies is an academic field studying the use of memory as a tool for remembering the past. In this paradigm memory is the past made present and is a contemporary phenomenon, something that, while concerned with the past, happens in the present; and second, that memory is a form of work, working through, labor, or action. Memory studies emerged as a new and different way for scholars to think about past events at the end of the 20th century.

Prerequisites

Knowledge	Student understands how people have existed, acted and thought in the always different context of the past.
Skills	Student is able to read and analyse texts, primary and secondary sources, both critically and empathetically, while addressing questions of origins, content, perspective and purpose, value, and limitations. Has basic technical, analytical, decision-making and investigative skills
Courses completed	Students will be familiar with central topics and key theories in the interdisciplinary field of memory studies. Students will be able to transfer this knowledge to discuss cultural phenomena (past or present) and sharpened their research skills by conducting their own small scale research project.

Course title	Oral History
Semester (winter/summer)	winter	ECTS	6
Lecturer(s)	dr hab. Wiktoria Kudela-Świątek
Department	Institute of History and Archival Studies

Course objectives (learning outcomes)

Oral history is the collection and study of historical information about individuals, families, important events, or everyday life using audiotapes, videotapes, or transcriptions of planned interviews. These interviews are conducted with people who participated in or observed past events and whose memories and perceptions of these are to be preserved as an aural record for future generations. Oral history strives to obtain information from different perspectives and most of these cannot be found in written sources. The seminar will introduce students to the method and theory of oral history. The course will include reading assignments on the method of oral history, the preparation of oral history projects and the evaluation of oral narratives.
